Farrell Offered Managership Of Indianapolis Club

INDIANAPOLIS (UP) — Kerby Farrell will be "considered" as manager of the Indianapolis Indians for 1958 if he wants the job, club officials said Monday.

The raw-boned Tennessean moved from the pinnacle of minor league success with Indianapolis to major league frustration in just one year. He was fired as Cleveland manager after piloting the Indians to a disappointing sixth-place finish.

Last year was all roses for the 44-year-old Farrell. He rallied the tribe for the American Association flag, the league playoffs, and crown.

He called it "my most wonderful season in baseball."

Monday, Farrell was thinking only of a major league comeback.

"I'm going to bounce back . . . yes sir, I'll be back," he said.

Speculation has it Farrell will go job-hunting while attending the World Series. Sources in Cleveland said he would be offered a managerial position in the Cleveland organization—possibly at San Diego.

But Indianapolis General Manager Ray Johnston said Farrell certainly would be considered here to succeed Andy Cohen, should he desire to return to the scene of his greatest triumph.

"His release came as a surprise to us," said Johnston. "Kerby would merit our consideration for the record he made here."

However, Johnston said the local management will make no move to get Farrell back until the situation has cleared.

"We're planning to survey this thing real close but may not do anything until the baseball convention at Colorado Springs in December," said Johnston.

Indianapolis President Owen J. Bush said he would be "glad" to talk to Farrell "if he wants the a job."

"But I don't know if I would hire him," said Bush. "I haven't made up my mind."
