

Jesse OUTLAR

★ Sports Editor ★

The Rich Get Richer

What a difference a year and a perfect game make. Last March no one heard about Don Larsen until his auto upended a light pole in the wee hours. Now he ranks next to Mickey Mantle as a tourist attraction around the Yankees' St. Pete shop. . . . Which reminds me that I'd still like to see Casey Stengel and Lou Boudreau swap teams, just to see if the professor is worth $80,000 as a manager.

Saddled with Kansas City and Washington, Boudreau and Chuck Dresen have about as much chance of winning the American League race, as Eddie Arcaro would of winning the Kentucky Derby on a mule. . . . More proof that the rich just get richer: Art Ditmar's dozen victories with lowly KC last year was one more than recently traded Mickey McDermott, Rip Coleman and Tom Morgan registered with the Yankees.

Outlar

as head coach at Sewanee.

Southern Assn. managers have less security than a French premier or an Indiana football coach. In six years, the eight clubs have employed a total of 37 pilots. Little Rock has had seven new faces over that span, Atlanta and Mobile rank second with six bosses in as many seasons. . . . In a recent Sporting News poll, Henry Aaron was voted Milwaukee's "best bad-ball hitter, best change-up hitter, best first-pitch hitter and best curve ball hitter." Wouldn't you be safe in saying he is the Braves' best hitter?

—Donovan Agrees With the Boss

His NFL comrades recently remarked that George Preston Marshall was "the greatest asset in the history of American sports." Which prompted Marshall's long-time sparring partner, Shirley Povich (Washington Post and Times-Herald) to write: "There are those who will contend that a more debatable statement has never been uttered in the entire history of the spoken

Lou Boudreau

Don Larsen

Eddie Arcaro

Dick Donovan

word." . . . Which reminds me that Bill Hartman, the former Georgia coach, ranks as one of Marshall's all-time Redskin favorites.

Ex-Cracker Dick Donovan and Chicago White Sox owner Chuck Comiskey must have swallowed a sip from the same cup. Both predicted the Sox would win the A.L. pennant. . . . William Earl Morgan, fleet seatback sidelined by injuries all last fall, injured his back in Miss. State spring practice. . . . Heavyweight champ Floyd Patterson is the latest sports figure to squeeze the Hollywood crowd out of space in Confidential sex-sational mag.

Asked what he needed to improve to stick with Milwaukee, sensational rookie Juan Pizarro replied, "Nothing." He won't get any argument from the Sally League, where he fanned 318 in 274 innings in his break-in season with the Jax Braves.

Kappy Williams, 14-year-old North Fulton water sprite, has served notice she's going to make a big splash this year. In fact, she already has. She set a record of :28.3 for the 50-yard free-style in the Southeastern Interscholastic and lowered it to :28 in the senior AAU at Athens. . . . Perhaps it's because they have to walk through the shallow tunnel in Pel Stadium, but the last three New Orleans' managers, Danny Murtaugh, Andy Cohen and Peanuts Lowery all measure 5-9 or less.

—Gopher Breeders Hated Poncey