The Crackers went into the final game of the home stand a half game in front of the hotly breathing Chickasaws and came out a bare percentage point ahead. They didn't mind the journey nearly so badly after Andy Cohen's visitors whipped up such a sendoff party.

The Pelicans, after winning Friday and losing Saturday, blasted the Crackers, 14-8, Sunday while Nashville was halving a double-header with the Chicks.

Bad enough, it was, to lose that half game. But in front of all those people!

It didn't look like baseball (1956 model) at all at Ponce de Leon. From the outside, it looked like Billy Graham was back. And on the inside Earl Mann gleefully counted 13,643 paid.

Mr. Graham wasn't there, but the Sunshine Boys were. Both the Pels and the Crackers were shocked to see the biggest regular season audience since Sept. 4, 1954.

The homefolks figured King had this one in the bag. With the kind of crowds the Pels have been seeing in New Orleans, stagefright ought to kill 'em, to say nothing of the illustrious Corky Valentine on the mound.

But the Pels, always a rowdy gang here, hammered Corky for four runs in the first and weren't showing a bit of mercy in the second when King summoned Chet Nichols, who did no better.

They ran right through Dick Grabowski and not until Lenny Yochim appeared in the third were they slowed down.

"What can you say?" answered King when asked what he could say. "You get all those people, you start the best pitcher on your club, and then this happens."
