

—Sarazen Improves With Age

You'll argue the point, but the record shows that Gene Sarazen is a better golfer now than he was when he won the National Open 35 years ago. His card in the recent PGA Seniors was 212, which didn't win. His three-round card in the '22 Open was 220, eight strokes worse. Now what do you say about the good ol' days? . . . "I made one mistake when I was in the majors," says Andy Cohen, branded a second-base failure as a Giant. "I followed Rogers Hornsby at the Polo Grounds." . . . And whatever became of Buster Chatham?

North Carolina, Kansas, SMU and kind are all the national rage, but there's a Negro college team (Texas Southern) that basketball expert Chuck Taylor says would sweep the NCAA title if the door were open. . . . Nothing succeeds like winning. Carmen Basilio's filling station business doubled in Syracuse after he won his title. . . . Remember when athletes were worried only about a chance to play instead of the size of a pension?

Joan Walsh is one of the country's rare woman horse trainers,