

—A Student Columnist's Plea

Dick Bass of College of Pacific leads all the colleges as a ball-carrier, but West Coast writers say the outstanding back out that way is Joe Kapp of California. . . . Andy Cohen, genial, lovable, chain cigar-smoker, has quit baseball after his severance at Denver. He'll become a beer distributor in El Paso, Tex. . . . Faith in the good judgment of youth is restored by the plea of a Georgia Tech columnist, Dave McNeill, that the cheers of the student section at Grant Field be cleaned up. Young McNeill has taken his fellow students to task in The Technique, and with just cause. Some of the language called upon, not only by Tech, but other cheering sections, leave something to be desired. As a parent, in other words, I'd hate to have to face a neighbor in the stadium and say: "My son yelled that."

Mail Call: "Now that the Bear is home in Alabamy, do you think 'Mammy' is tough enough to schedule Mississippi Southern again in the future?"—A. M. O'Neal, Atlanta. . . . "Did it ever occur to you how silly Atlanta will look, playing AA baseball while Jacksonville, Miami, Louisville and Richmond, all smaller, are playing AAA?"—L. D. McMath, Atlanta. . . . "The unsportsmanlike conduct in football we have today never occurred when teams were composed entirely of students. Everybody felt kindly toward the players then, but today, when a lot of them are paid for, the public feels like it has a right to abuse them. Of course this is wrong, but it is hard to handle."—James H. Hammond, Columbia, S.C.
