

Miners End WAC Season In Basement Once Again

New Mexico put the University of Texas at El Paso back in the Western Athletic Conference baseball cellar for the second straight year with Saturday's doubleheader sweep, but Miner coach Andy Cohen is already looking ahead to next year.

"We've got to go out and try to find a few hard throwing pitchers," Cohen said Sunday night after returning from the Lobo sweep in Albuquerque. "You know, just a few big kids who just throw the ball."

The Miners didn't have enough pitching in the Lobo series. UNM took a 15-10 win on Friday, and swept the Saturday twinbill by 7-0 and 3-1 scores.

The three losses left the Miners with a 2-16 WAC-Southern Division workslate. U.T. El Paso ended the season with 15 straight league losses after winning two of three from New Mexico at the start of the conference race.

"I thought we would have a better season," Cohen added. "We started out real well, then just fell down."

New Mexico got complete game performances from Arnie Marzulo and Rick Koch Saturday. Marzulo shut out the Miners on eight hits in the nine inning opener, and Koch, who had lost a 12 inning decision to U.T. El Paso at Dudley Field in that early series, gave the visitors only three hits in the nightcap.
