Spring registration up

Enrollment may reach 10,100 by the end of late registration, a rise from last year's total of 10,024, and may possibly tabulate still another 100 students, according to Registrar Dr. Don Paulson.

Late registration will continue in the Ballroom in the Union until tomorrow for those who missed the previous dates. Next week, Jan. 21-25, registration will be handled by the Registrar's office in the Administration Building, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Students who register will have to go through the entire procedure—obtaining of packets, class cards, payment of fee—in the Union Ballroom, and later in the Administration Building.

After January 25, students may enroll for the spring semester only by obtaining permission from the dean of the college under which they are studying, and from their class instructors.

Students enrolling after the regular registration are being assessed a penalty fee of $5 for the first late day (Jan. 14) and for each additional late day, up to $15.

Paulson said reactions to the packet registration this semester have, for the most part, been favorable. "Faculty members were especially pleased with it, saying it was much easier, since the different departments were close together."

People working at the registration said that the process was the smoothest and most organized they have ever seen, and one employee said that she had been told that students would have derogatory remarks about the procedure. "Everyone was very happy and said it went more quickly and easily than expected."

Most students polled about the new registration said they preferred the old system of pre-registration to this one, saying that it was much easier to write on a computer form.

"In the packet registration, one student said, the people giving out the class cards you the wrong ones and don't bother to give you the lab cards. At least in pre-registration, any mistakes you make you do yourself."

Complaints received now seem to concern the newly established late fee.

Senators gather names, hope to form car pools

"It is to the advantage of students to form car pools," said Doug Dumford, student senator and member of the Ad Hoc Committee on Transportation.

"If the gas shortage gets worse, sharing rides will become even more advantageous," he added.

Last semester the committee collected the names, addresses and phone numbers of persons needing or willing to share transportation to and from the University.

The names were gathered by placing prominently displayed boxes in several buildings on campus. The boxes are still in place to allow all persons interested in finding or sharing a ride.

A compiled list of names was to have been placed on the Student Association bulletin boards. However, since the theft of two of those boards, new display areas were needed.

The "Ride Board," first floor, East Union, will be used and a list will probably be posted in the library.

Danny Garwick, another committee member, said the car pool concept could be helped by some publicity from KTEP, the University radio station.

The committee was formed with the long-range plan of securing city bus routes to and through the campus, Dumford said this was being worked on.

Personnel officers meeting here

UT El Paso is hosting the annual Personnel Officers Conference today and tomorrow. The conference will cover such topics as equal employment, workman's compensation and retirement benefits.

Dr. Arleigh B. Templeton, University president, will open the conference at the Downtown Holiday Inn welcoming the delegates from The UT System, in and out of state universities, those from the Teacher Retirement System, and the Aetna Life and Casualty Company.

UT El Paso administrators in charge of coordinating the conference are Eugene Green, personnel director; John E. Lafayette, associate personnel director; Mrs. Peggy Kenley, personnel assistant; and Paula Smith, office supervisor.

Committee plans changes

Recommendations by the Student Services Fee Allocation Committee call for a change in responsibility for providing funds for campus groups conducting cultural activities.

According to the recommendations, the money would be controlled by the Student Association SA rather than Student Activities. Some $10,000 would be allocated for the purpose of financing activities of campus organizations.

Jose Mario Acosta, executive vice president of the SA said if the committee plans follow through, Student Activities would only be responsible for backing concerts.

Acosta also said the recommendations sought Student Association input into the selection of Lyceum speakers. The committee recommended the Lyceum budget remain $12,300, but that five of the speakers be chosen by the student government.

The committee also suggested the transfer of funds from El Burro and Goodbye Dove to the Prospector. The money from the humor and literary magazines would raise the newspaper budget from SA fees to more than $13,000. The committee also advised including money from the Josephine Clardy Fox fund in the newspaper budget.

A bi-weekly publication of the Prospector might be possible with the increase in funds, and the panel suggested the University look into the possibility of acquiring the

New classes formed to offer individual help

Funds from the state legislature have enabled two new study skills classes, one totally new, to be added to the curriculum at the University.

Vocaciones are still available for the classes, Introduction to College Study (English 2121), and Quantitative Study Skills, (Math 2121).

According to Dr. Nancy Wood, director of the Study Skills and Tutorial Service, the courses are designed to help students do well by attacking the problems which cause failure in some classes.

"The classes are small, and each one has two or three graduate instructors so students receive individual attention." We are trying to teaching the best ways of studying and learning. And, since the classes are funded by state grants, students can make good use of their tax money to further their education."

The Quantitative Skills Class offers instruction for solving problems, especially word problems which seem to "scare" students.

Wood said a minimal amount of homework is required from the classes, since most is done right there. "Quantitative students who are taking math class can use their homework from their assignment and be helped with problems on the spot."

Introduction to College Studies is in its second semester, and offers instruction and practice in note-taking, textbook reading, exam taking, library use, and general information to aid students with courses. "This class is not an English class, although it is listed as such in the catalogue," Wood said. "It teaches the best way to study, read and mark texts and take exams."

The Quantitative Skills Class was not listed in the catalogue, and information on times and classes is available through the Study Skills and Tutorial Service, 105 W. Union.

Alumni fund money grows

Contributions to the Alumni Fund for Excellence have increased by $4,400 from the 1972 total, according to Lloyd L. Leach, director of the development office.

The jump is a result of the efforts of the different organizations that form the Alumni fund.

Leach said alumni fund gifts increased by 129 in 1973. This resulted in an increase from $60,700 to $65,115.

The Matrix Society which includes alumni, faculty and staff increased from 200 members in 1972 to 215 in 1973. Each person donates a minimum of $100.

Couples and individuals who contribute $500 or more are listed in the President's Associates, which includes persons such as doctors, lawyers and businessmen in the Allocations of the monies are made by University President Arleigh B. Templeton and the business office. Distribution is done according to departmental needs, said the director. The library receives 50 per cent. The remainder goes to the Lyceum Series and to the Bureau of Business and Economic Research.

The final report on all contributions to and donations from the fund will be included in the spring issue of Nova, the alumni magazine. Leach added that gifts are still being received for 1973.
