Could be five-club tangle in Southern

From almost a month of play it now looks as if the Southern League chase could become a five-club affair. Atlanta, Birmingham, Memphis and Nashville were liked for the first division before the first official pitch.

Those Vols went into a tailspin, but in knocking off the Chicks in a double-header, they showed it wouldn't be wise to count 'em out. New Orleans has come up with a pretty fair club and Andy Cohen will get everything out of the Pells.

MARION

Every club in the league is waiting on help coming down from the majors and triple-A clubs. Two good players could make pennant winners out of any of the five top clubs.

The Southern needs a close race to make up for the loss in attendance during the cold streaks. Seldom, since chain baseball, have the four big cities—Atlanta, New Orleans, Birmingham and Memphis—been at one another's throats. This would be a good year for a return of the big cities to the first division.

Red Marion, manager of the Louisville club, left Denver, saying "Denver is definitely the club to beat in my book." Red can read standings as well as anyone. . . . The Bears won 10 of their first 11 starts and there's more help coming down from the Yankees.

Clyde King, who said he had 22 double-A players, still believes in his Crackers. "A manager couldn't ask for better cooperation or more harmony," says the bespectacled Cracker manager.

King, an old pitcher, used 54 pitchers in the Crackers' first 19 games. So it is pitching help the Crackers want from the Milwaukee Braves.
