

At Yankee camp—

Andy Cohen discovers Stengel

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., Feb. 26—(AP)—Andy Cohen, after 30 years, is back with New York. Only this time he is a member of the Yankee organization instead of the Giants.

How many fans remember Andy Cohen and his remarkable debut with the Giants on opening day, 1928?

April 5, 1928. Andy Cohen. A dark-skinned, black-haired rookie up from Buffalo nervously stepped into the big shoes of Rogers Hornsby at second base for the New York Giants and, almost at once, captivated the town so completely that the fans forgave manager John McGraw for trading away the great rajah to the Boston Braves.

RARELY EVER, before or since, has a player, under such dramatic circumstances, made so spectacular a debut in the majors.

All the inspired 23-year-old Cohen did that day was to clout a single, double and home run off the Braves' star pitcher, Bob Smith. He drove in three runs and scored the other to practically single-handedly account for the Giants' 4-2 triumph.

Cohen continued his sizzling pace for several weeks. Unfortunately, he was no Hornsby nor any facsimile thereof and his fall from grace was almost as speedy as his rise.

Within two years the compact little Texan from El Paso was back in the minors.

TODAY, 30 YEARS older and at least that many pounds heavier, Cohen again is connected with New York, as manager of the Yankees' Denver farm club in the American Assn. During the past two weeks he has been assisting Casey Stengel and his crew of coaches and minor league pilots in the instructional course for Yankee hopefuls.

"This will be my 15th year as a manager," Cohen said, "and I thought I knew a little bit about this baseball business. But what an education I've been getting just listening to Casey and the other."

"No wonder the Yankees keep on winning pennants. This is where the Yankee success originates. Right here. Never in all my years have I seen such an efficient method of teaching, attended such interesting meetings and listened to such thorough lectures and coaching techniques."

The most amazing individual in the Yankee camp, as far as Cohen is concerned, is Stengel himself.

"That man is a wonder," Andy enthused. "You know, even though he was the first big leaguer I ever saw—as a kid in El Paso back in 1919—and I played against his Toledo club in the Little World Series when I was with Buffalo eight years later, I never really knew Casey before. I figured he must be a great manager judging from all the pennant he won but I also had the impression he was a clown.

"It didn't take me long to realize how wrong I was—about the clown angle. I've sat up and listened to him discuss baseball—that's all he ever talks about—night after night and I am beginning to understand why he's been so successful. The man is a genius. If he's a clown I want to be one too. He's the soundest baseball man I've ever listened to and I've learned as much from him in two weeks than in all my years as a manager."

Cohen, former University of Alabama athlete and New Orleans Pel manager, was at Indianapolis last year.

At Jones Valley—

Fifth district battling begins

Woodlawn, the defending state champion, and Tuscaloosa, a team that has whipped the champs twice this season, are in the featured games of the Fifth District Class AA basketball tournament which opened today.

The Colonels get a tough test in their opening assignment when they must take on Coach Jack Caldwell's Walker County five. That is the big game tonight, set for 8:20 in the Jones Valley gym.

Tuscaloosa, seeded fourth, catches Bessemer at 7, first game on the night program.

Phillips and Tarrant opened the meet at 3 p.m., followed by Carbon Hill against Mortimer Jordan.

TUSCALOOSA County and Fairfield round out the night's program at 9:40 p.m.

The scene will switch to the Municipal Auditorium Thursday when Ensley and Shades Valley, seeded second and third, respectively, will swing into action.

Ensley's first opponent will be Ramsay, a team that knocked the Jackets out of a tie for the City championship in the last Big Six game of the season. That one is set for 5 p.m. tomorrow. Ramsay has
