Mexican President Had Unusual Interest In Mexican-Americans

Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The President of Mexico showed "unusual warmth and interest" in the life of Mexican Americans in this country, during his visit to U.S. cities, reported Henry Ramirez of California, chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Opportunities for the Spanish Speaking, at a press conference here Thursday.

Ramirez called the conference after accompanying the president to all the cities on his tour except New York City. Ramirez said he represented President Nixon.

Therefore, Ramirez, who was called to California on that day, said he could not answer a question on the propriety of the Mexican president's New York City meeting with a large group of invited intellectuals to discuss how they would like to change the United States. The group included liberals, writers, far leftists, according to the Washington Post, which added the meeting might have been most unusual in subject matter but for the fact all the guests were critics of U.S. government who had previously been most outspoken about the need for change.

Ramirez said when he was with President Echeverria he noted the many Mexican-Americans now in the federal government under President Nixon and thought it would be a good idea to see more in government jobs in state and local government, where now there is a sparsity, "particularly in Texas."
