They finally stopped Saul Kleinfeld.

The perpetual athletic fan and promoter was brought to halt, emotionally overcome and almost speechless, when he was announced as recipient of the fifth annual Sportsman of the Year award at the annual Temple Mt. Sinai Men's Club Father and Son banquet Wednesday night.

Given a standing ovation when the honor was announced, Kleinfeld was selected for his contribution and promotion in a wide field of sports, including basketball, bowling, golf, softball and youth baseball, and for his work in providing entertainment and interest in underprivileged groups.

Joined by Mrs. Kleinfeld after the presentation, Kleinfeld recovered quickly enough to urge the more than 400 persons present in Temple Mt. Sinai to come out and watch his Union Furniture basketball team beat the Harlem Globetrotters Feb. 2.

Kleinfeld's award topped the program of the banquet, which also saw four other special awards.

The special awards went to University of Texas at El Paso flankerback Chuck Hughes for his outstanding pass receiving the past three years;

To UTEP defensive star Charlie West for leading the nation in pass interceptions last season;

To former UTEP cage star Osten Artis for his leadership ability while playing three years with the Miners and for his part in winning the national championship;

And to Tom Rush, veteran coach and youth worker for his contribution to the El Paso athletic scene.

Assistant Coach Cliff Speegle accepted the award for West, Willie Worsley for Artis and John Phelan for Rush.

Gene Autry, president of the El Paso Sun Kings, told the audience of his early days in the recording and movie industry and described how the California Angels, of which he is president of the board, came into being.

Rocky Bridges, new field manager of the Sun Kings, drew a large portion of laughs with his stories of baseball, and promised the Sun Kings would do their best to be entertaining for the coming season.

Andy Cohen was master of ceremonies for the event with Jay Mendeloff, president of the Men's Club, issuing the welcome and Rabbi Floyd Fierman asking the invocation.

Agatha Lee Gets Hole-In-One

Agatha Lee made her fourth hole in one Wednesday at the El Paso Country Club. Mrs. Lee, who is already a member of the Hole in One club, ached the 10th hole.

She was playing with Annette Morgan and Claragene Hazelton. The 10th hole is 175-yards long.

Six Prep Cage Games Scheduled

Six games are scheduled Thursday night in high school basketball action. All the games will be in conference play.

On the Southern scene of District 1-AAAA, the Jefferson Foxes who have the best record in the city with a 3-0 mark, will host the Bowie Bears who have a 1-2 mark. In other South action, Burges with a 0-2 mark will play the Eastwood Troopers at Eastwood. The Troop has a 1-2 record in sectional competition.

The Ysleta Indians and the Bel Air Highlanders, both sporting a 2-1 mark will battle at Bel Air for the second place position.
