

Here's By Chuck How Whitlock

A Welcome Surprise Visitor

An extremely pleasant surprise this past week was the appearance of George Genovese at the annual Father-Son Sportsmanship dinner of the Temple Mt. Sinai Men's Club. George is the little fellow who was first manager of the El Paso Sun Kings when John Phelan and Co. returned El Paso to organized baseball in 1961. That year the Kings were the San Francisco Giant affiliate in the Sophomore League with Genovese moving his club from Artesia, N.M., to El Paso.

The following year when the Kings advanced to the Texas League George was again the manager and produced a championship team. But it was his 1963 team that really sticks in memory. That was the lineup of power sluggers which shattered the Texas League home run record.

George was the first man named Sportsman of The Year by the Men's Club, and when he received an invitation to attend this year's function he took time off from his scouting duties with the Giants to fly to El Paso. It was a happy decision, because Andy Cohen, his former assistant with the Sun Kings, was the surprise honoree.

It was a great personal pleasure to have the chance to visit with the scrappy little guy who is a big part of baseball.