

At Ysleta Cutoff Monday

Miners Host Ags For Two

Andy Cohen thinks it's time for his University of Texas at El Paso baseball team to wake up and begin playing the style of baseball his players are capable of playing.

"I'm disappointed with the way the boys have looked. Our pitching hasn't come up to expectations and part of the blame is due to our poor fielding," said Cohen Sunday as he talked about Monday's doubleheader with New Mexico State beginning at 1 p.m. at the Ysleta Cutoff.

"Our pitching can't be effective if the defense makes five or six errors a game," Cohen said. "We just haven't jelled as much as we should have and I may be moving some of the boys around."

One move Cohen has considered could take place in the catching department where Terry Goodro and Joe Segapelli have been sharing the duties.

"I hoped my catching would be improved this year but it looks like it hasn't. There's a chance I might start Joe Dehn who caught for us last year or maybe Dave Patt," explained the Miner coach.

If Cohen decides on moving Patt from his shortstop's position to catch balls and strikes, Louie Morales would fill the gap in the infield. Dehn, who has been used as a relief hurler so far, has caught some practice sessions this year and is readily available to step in at the request of Cohen.

Dave Jannusch is slated to start the opener on the mound against the Aggies while Cohen is yet undecided upon the second game hurler. "I'll have to wait and see how we do the first game," said Cohen. "It might be Jerry Walker or possibly Gary Kobatt. He looked pretty good last week against Denver."
