

Lack Of Communication Spells Miner Downfall

By MARK LEIBSON

Times Sports Writer

Dave Jannusch slumped his head between his knees and prayed for a fly ball or infielder grounder. "Just a pop-up Joe. Come on buddy. That's all we need," he suddenly yelled to his roommate and best friend, Joe Dehn, who had come on to relieve him in the ninth inning with the bases loaded.

The University of Texas at El Paso had already whipped New Mexico 8-2 in the opener Saturday at Dudley Field behind the three-hit pitching of freshman Jerry Walker and were leading the second game 4-2 going into the ninth.

With two outs and the bases empty, the Miners appeared to be on their way to their first doubleheader sweep of the season. More important was the fact that these games were under Western Athletic Conference jurisdiction.

Jannusch had lost his composure after arguing that a called ball on the next batter with a two-two count was a strike and proceeded to walk three consecutive Lobo batters before UTEP Coach Andy Cohen asked Dehn to save the outcome.

After working a three ball, one strike count to Bob Bartel, the designated hitter sent the ball a mile high in front of the pitcher's mound. Centerfielder Bob Alsup had enough time to run in and grab the ball.

Lack of communication between third baseman Glenn Villarreal and first sacker Keith Dwinell decided UTEP's downfall. As the ball began its descent from the heavens, collision course could be traced to a point five feet in front of the mound on the first base side.

The two husky infielders crossed paths, the ball bounced from Villarreal's glove and the score was tied at 4-4 with still two outs and runners now on second and third.

Clark Langdon followed with a grounder over second which was fielded by Art Bravo but the sophomore's hurried throw pulled Dwinell off the bag as

(Please Turn To Page 6-E)