Andy Cohen, one-time Bison shortstop, is in trouble with Vice President Donnie Bush of the Indianapolis Indians because he stays up to see the late movies on TV, then gets up again at 7 AM to see the morning shows. "The only time he sleeps is when he's managing the team," complains Bush . . . Welterweight Joey Klein, who quit boxing to operate a luncheonette in Kearney, N. J., is back in training to recoup his business losses. He also will coach boxing at Yeshiva University . . . Back in training, too, is lightweight Ludwig Lightburn. He insists the detached retina has healed and that his vision is OK again.
