Monument No. 1 Park Dedicated to 'Unity'

Terming boundaries "uniting" rather than "dividing" lines, El Paso and Juarez officials today dedicated a historical park at International Boundary Monument No. 1, on the west bank of the Rio Grande near Smeltertown.

At the close of the short ceremony, youths identifying themselves as "La Raza students" from the University of Texas at El Paso took over the speaker's podium and asked the monument be named after Ricardo Falcon, Chicano leader from Colorado who was shot to death in Orogrande in August.

THE YOUTHS were largely ignored by the crowd of some 80 persons, most of them dignitaries from El Paso-Juarez.

The highlight of the ceremony was the unveiling of two bronze plaques in English and Spanish describing the monument as originally establishing in 1855 and as the first of a series of monuments which marked the land boundary between the U.S. and Mexico westwards to the Pacific.

The unveiling was performed by Leon Metz, El Paso Historical Society president, Andy Cohn, president, El Paso Beautify Assn., and Commissioner Joseph Friedkin, U.S. Commissioner, Water and Boundary Commission for the U.S., and by Prof. Armando Chavez, president Juarez Regional Committee of the Chihuahua Historical Society, and David Herrera Jordan, Mexican Commissioner Water and Boundary Commission.

THE CEREMONY coincided with the 313th anniversary of the founding of Juarez.

Messrs. Metz, Chavez, Herrera Jordan, Friedkin, and Mayor Mario Jaquez of Juarez, spoke prior to the unveiling.

The park was established jointly by the El Paso and Juarez historical societies, the El Paso Beautify Assn., Dona Ana County Historical society, the Water and Boundary Commission and the Juarez Federal Public Works Board.
