

Giants Paid $5,000 For Four Innings

Another guy Leo's aiming to see is Andy Cohen, the Phillies coach who had a victorious one-day show at managing in the interim between Eddie Sawyer's departure and Gene Mauch's arrival.

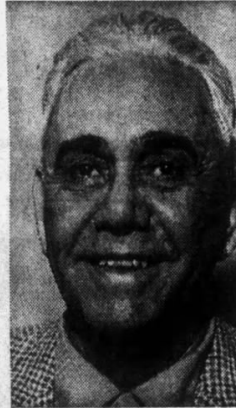

Cohen and Mangum were on the 1927 Buffalo team which swept to the International League pennant and Mangum says Andy then was a counterpart to one Ted Williams in his disdain of the fans. He thumbed his nose once at the Newark stands and he couldn't even stick his head out of the dugout after that without being pelted with an assortment of weapons, juicy and otherwise.

The Giants bought Leo for $5,000 and he earned that by pitching just four innings. "That was a pretty expensive four innings," Leo admitted.

Mangum won't deny that part of the reason for that short term was another chapter in his long rivalry with his managers. The end came when he insisted on throwing a curve to Hornsby on a 3-2 pitch, despite explicit instructions from the bench by John McGraw to catcher Shanty Hogan.

Umpire Bill Klem called the pitch a strike and when Hornsby yelled, told the great star: "get out of here. You just didn't think the busher would throw you a curve."

Leo adds: "The curve was low

LEO MANGUM

and away and I didn't think he could hit it. Two days later a pretty good pitcher, I think it was Jess Barnes, threw two there and Hornsby put them both in the upper deck."

Leo's earlier stay with the White Sox also ended on a stormy note, winding up with him knocking the button off manager Eddie Collins' cap with a whistling fast ball during batting practice.

Players Nowadays Bit Too Fragile?

"The Giants only pitched me four innings and I also got a heckuva good break with the White Sox, too," Leo grumbled.

"They bought me and John Bradski from the International League after I'd won 14 straight and he hit .350. Then for 17 days straight, I pitched batting practice.

"On the 18th day, they brought me in against Detroit. The bases were loaded and none out and Heinie Manush was at bat, with Harry Heilmann on deck. What a chance for old Leo—after five long years in the minors.

"But I got out of it with only one run scored. Willie Kamm made a great stop and started a double play and that saved my skin."

You can always get a baseball yarn from Leo but he doesn't live in the past. He keeps up with the game but he's a firm believer that major leaguers today don't have as much "fun" as they used to.

"It used to be a treat just to go out to the park to watch Charlie Grimm, Rabbit Maranville or Frankie Frisch. They were full of jokes and stunts, like Frisch stepping carefully around the puddles when it rained, or acting like he was going to step over the line drawn by Bill Klem."

And, like all old-timers, Leo thinks the boys nowadays are a bit too dainty. "In that 1-0 shutout over the Gas House Gang, Pepper Martin hit one back to the mound that bounced off my collar-bone. Today, they'd be putting the pitcher on a stretcher but those days you hid the injuries because if you were hurt, you just didn't play."

Leo's always ready with the stories and we'll have another this summer about his days on the Braves with Babe Ruth. We got just a sample Tuesday but we want to hear more.

Lima Product Paces Bee-Gee Golf Squad

BOWLING GREEN — Harold Warren, former Lima Senior golf standout, leads the Bowling Green State University golf team at the mid-season point with a 77.6 average.

Warren, who has been a consistent winner for Coach Forrest Creason over his three years on the varsity, came up with one of the best rounds last weekend at Notre Dame with a 73.

Now a resident of Columbia, La., where his father is an Army officer, Warren will be one of Bowling Green's top participants in the Ohio Intercollegiate tournament at Ohio State on May 9 and the Mid-American Conference at Athens Country Club May 20-21.

As a sophomore, he finished eighth in the MAC tourney at Kalamazoo, Mich., with a 36-hole score of 152. Last year at Miami the rangy ex-Spartan was 11th with a 150.

Warren had an early season 72 at the Guyan Country Club in Huntington, W. Va., for BG medalist honors.