

Callison Is Named Starting Outfielder

DENVER—Three Indianapolis players—John Callison, John Romano and Barry Latman—will see action here tonight in the 16th American Association All-Star game.

All three were voted to the All-Star squad which will meet the home-town Bears before upwards of 15,000 fans. Callison, named as an outfield starter, also is in the running for the league's rookie award, currently is leading the A.A. in home runs and is one of the five leaders in runs-batted-in.

At the time of his election to the All-Star team, Romano also was among the league leaders in home runs and RBIs in addition to being one of the top hitters. Since then, however, he has tailed off considerably. Latman's selection was something of a surprise, especially in view of the fact that he has lost four of his last five starts and another in a relief role.

But either one could wrap up the game's honors as Ron Jackson did last year to win the game's MVP award. The Indianapolis first baseman personally directed the All-Stars to a 5-4 victory over Wichita by batting in four runs with a homer and two singles.

The host club (the team leading the league after the July 4 games) has won only six of the previous 15 All-Star encounters with the most recent "home" victory being recorded in 1956 when Denver defeated the All-Stars, 10-8. The turnout for that game was 19,769, setting an all-time record for the midsummer classic.

Tonight's game will have a special significance for the opposing managers. Ben Geraghty, who will direct the All-Stars by virtue of his Wichita club winning the league championship last year, sustained one of the few blots on his brilliant managerial career (four pennants in the last five years) when his Braves bowed to the All-Stars last year. Ben naturally will be out for revenge in tonight's classic.

Andy Cohen, Denver manager and the Indianapolis skipper last year, played in the league's first All-Star contest in 1934 when he was a member of the host Minneapolis club. Cohen also played for the Miller in the '35 classic, and then was an All-Star choice against Columbus in 1937.

Events preceding tonight's game will include meetings of the league's board of directors, the league writers and broadcasters, and a luncheon for all, including the players of both teams.
