

WHO SAID WHAT

South Will Rise, Says Professor

By JOE ADAMS

"The Lord or fate, with some assist from time and technology, will make the South the leader of the next century," Dr. WALTER PRESCOTT WEBB, University of Texas professor, told a Princeton University conference on industrialization of the South. "If I thought that the history of the South from 1960 to 2030 would repeat the history of the South from 1860 to 1930, I would advise every young person in the land and all the older ones who could, to get away as soon as possible," he said. "But as I see it, it is probable that this next century will belong to the South . . . its wealth and general welfare are increasing more rapidly than that of any other region."

W. AVERELL HARRIMAN, ex-U.S. ambassador to Russia and New York governor, suggests that America choose its words more carefully.

"Plagiarizing from (Soviet Premier) Khrushchev, we should 'bury' the word capitalism under Marx' tombstone," he said.

"Not only must we have a vocabulary that can be understood by others in describing American ideals and objectives, we must be willing to present them, and with pride. The word capitalism has become almost synonymous with colonialism . . . to people of underdeveloped countries."

ANDY COHEN, an ex-pilot of the Indianapolis Indians and coach for the Philadelphia National League baseball club, was acting manager long enough to pilot the Phillies to a 5-4 victory over Milwaukee last night, after the sudden resignation of Eddie Sawyer and his replacement by Gene Mauch, a former Indianapolis player. While temporarily in charge, Cohen took time to quip: "Here I am, working 30 years to a big league manager. I last one day. It must be some kind of record."

POPE JOHN XXIII, in a Good Friday message addressed specifically to American Catholics, but for the entire population: "We greet, with the affection of our paternal heart, the entire American people, towards whom we cherish sentiments of warm benevolence and admiration. This message reaches you . . . on the day when Christian peoples are commemorating the passion and death of the Saviour of mankind. We wish to assure you that in our daily prayers we beg our Lord to pour forth His blessings and the abundance of His redeeming grace upon each one of you and upon your families . . .

"And, as we fervently beseech Him to grant a just and lasting concord between all people, we ask Him to continue to bestow peace and prosperity upon your great country."
