BASEBALL CHATTER

Capable Hands To Direct Tribe's Spring Training

By MAX GREENWALD

Indianapolis Indians' spring training this year will be on more modest pattern than it has been since 1952.

It was in 1952 that the Tribe became a cog in the giant baseball factory Cleveland operates at Daytona Beach, Fla. And there is no doubt that Hank Greenberg and his agents have the most magnificent training setup (including the best food) of any baseball firm.

But many baseball men believe a better job can be done at a smaller camp where training is handled on a more personal basis.

Owens Bush, Indians' president, always has favored the setup to which the Tribe will return this month at Hollywood, Fla.

In their first season as a Chicago White Sox affiliate, the Indians will get the personal contact which many deem essential for development of player personnel.

And, though the training site may not be swarming with big names as was the case at Daytona Beach, the Indianapolis premises won't be lacking in people with diamond know-how.

To start with, in direct charge of the Tribesmen will be Bush himself with his almost half-century of baseball background. Manager Andy Cohen and Coach Johnny Hutchings. Cohen and Big John have been around for quite a spell and both are rated highly as tacticians in the sport.

Then the White Sox also have assigned a staff of men who aren't slouches in the strategy division.

Hugh Mulcahy, former Phillies' pitcher, will be camp supervisor and also will have four other Chicago affiliates under his wing—Colorado Springs, Davenport, Duluth-Superior and Dubuque.

Indianapolis will start camp activities March 12 when Tribe batterymen report. The balance of the Indians' squad is booked for March 17. Colorado Springs comes in April 1, Davenport

HUGH MULCAHY

April 5, and both Duluth-Superior and Dubuque April 8.

Mulcahy has been in baseball since 1933 when he broke in with Woonsocket of the New England League. He joined the Phillies in 1935, staying until 1946, with exception of Army service from March 8, 1941, until Aug. 5, 1945.

Mulcahy then did some minor league pitching until becoming a member of the White Sox organization in 1950 as mound coach for minor league affiliates.

His special chore, of course, will be working with hurlers and, he will have three chief assistants.

They will be Bennie Huffman, former American League catcher, who will handle the receivers, Johnny Mostil, Chicago outfield star of the 20s who will keep an eye on the gardeners, and Frank Parenti, former minor league second baseman and manager, who will instruct infielders.

Huffman, Mostil and Parenti also are White Sox scouts.

Heading the Colorado Springs squad will be Manager Ira Hutchinson, well-known in the American Association as a pitcher for Columbus.

And Duluth-Superior also is piloted by a fellow who gained fame in the association. He is Joe Hauser, who set the all-time league record in 1933 when he bashed 60 home runs for Minneapolis.

Glen C. Miller, White Sox farm director, will have overall charge of the Hollywood camp, assisted by Carol Davis, farm secretary. And Miller says that present plans call for just one workout daily.

At Daytona Beach, there was a sunup to sundown agenda.

CLEVELAND baseball fans the other day bought a full-page newspaper advertisement to urge Al Rosen to return to the American League Indians. It was a Cleveland crowd last summer which had a hearty laugh when Rosen was injured during a game.

Bothered by injuries some of the time, the third baseman had two bad seasons after winning the most valuable player award.

Thus his performance was criticized in 1956 by General Manager Hank Greenberg. Rosen then said he would retire and stuck to his word, taking a job with a Cleveland brokerage firm.

"Come Back to the Fold," said the fans in their advertisement.

A BASEBALL player would have to earn a million dollars to equal Babe Ruth's $50,000 salary.

That's the word from T. Coleman Andrews, who once was Internal Revenue Service director. He says Babe's take-home slice of that annual check was $69,000. But federal and state income taxes, along with inflation, made it necessary to get a million to keep pace with the buying power from Ruth's $69,000.

HIT-and-RUN — Del Webb, Yankees' co-owner, has this to say about Brooklyn's gestures towards the West coast: O'Malley (Walter O'Malley, Dodgers' president) is miffed at the treatment he's gotten in Brooklyn. He's made no bones about it.

Neille Fox became the highest-paid second baseman in White Sox history when he signed for a slight raise to put his salary at an estimated $30,000. Dave Melton, rookie Kansas City outfielder, holds a degree from Stanford University where he majored in labor-management relations.
