

Miners Meet Raiders In Doubleheader Today

It will be safe to assume that Texas Tech will see some lefthanded hurling Friday and Saturday when the Red Raiders arrive for a three-game baseball series with the University of Texas at El Paso Miners.

Coach Andy Cohen's Miners, now on a two-game winning streak, will meet the Red Raiders in a double feature Friday at Dudley Field, starting at 1:30 p.m. Saturday's single game is booked for 2:30 p.m.

Cohen has employed seven pitchers in the first four games this season and five have thrown from the portside. In fact, lefties have drawn the starting assignments in the first four games and another is the likely choice in the opener Friday against Tech.

After his impressive work against University of Albuquerque in the third game, Harry Milner may be called upon to toe the slab in the opener Friday against the Red Raiders.

In his only appearance Milner worked seven innings—the route — against the Dons and gave up five hits and one earned run while blowing third strikes past seven hitters and issuing one free ticket. His earned run average, after one outing, is a respectable 1.29.

Cohen's other pitching nominees could come from either Marc Bombard (0-1), Lynn Hunt (0-1) or, possibly, Terry Witt (1-0). Like Milner, all are lefthanders.

Witt worked the New Mexico State game and was the winner although he needed help in the late innings from Bombard and Bill Diesselhorst.

Diesselhorst has been Cohen's No. 1 relief man in the first four games. The slender righthander has toiled six and two-third innings of relief and has been nicked for two earned runs and seven hits. He has struck out six and walked none.

After sitting out the opener against Albuquerque due to a slight muscle injury, John Miller has swung a big bat for the Miners. The outfielder-first baseman has seven hits in 10 tries for a fine .700 average. He has one double and three runs-batted-in.

It is entirely too early for a firm statement, but after four games, Cohen's hitting appears much stronger than he had expected.
