

ran a bad last in the North Dakota town of Fargo-Moorhead, not to be confused with Seth.

Skeeter Newsome tied for second in the South Atlantic League (A) with his home-town Columbus, Ga., nine. Rollie Hemsley had Charlotte, N. C., in the same conference. Fred Garrison—remember him with the A's?—lagged with Beaumont, Tex., in the Big State League (B). Red McQuillen opened up managing Syracuse for Reardon, and also was to get fired with Clovis, N. M., in the Southwestern League for helping it finish 44 games out of first place. Andy Cohen had New Orleans, a pretty good hop from the Polo Grounds, where John McGraw once brought him in as Rogers Hornsby's successor at second base and a Jewish attraction at the box office. Andy caught a few flies, and drew about as many.

The Guide is like that. Move a page ahead, and you move years back. And did somebody ask whatever happened to Taft Wright and Gerald Walker? They managed Orlando, Fla., last year. Eighth place.

Orlando is where the Senators train.
