

ANDY COHEN, THE PHILLIES' NEW FIRST-BASE coach who is back in the majors after a 30-year lapse, describes himself as having been this type of ball player:
"My shirts were too clean to send to the laundry and too soiled to wear to parties."

INTEGRATION IN BASEBALL HAS REACHED THE point where they even kid about racial prejudices.
Joe Garagiola's first crack in that department still gets a giggle in all the camps. The Cardinals' clowning sports-caster saw a glum Bill White standing in the clubhouse doorway during a game-postponing rainstorm and cracked: "Hey Bill, let's you and me go down town and shake up Kresge's." The broadest grin in the clubhouse came from the Negro outfielder.

More recently, the Cardinals were giving their annual alleged talent show in their St. Pete hotel. Garagiola was
M. C. and stood by while Vinegar Bend Mizell did a monologue. Some heckler among the hotel guests, who threw in a few cheers for Alabama, kept butting in on Mizell until Garagiola came forward and said, "Dad, if you don't cut that out we'll all come down and build a lunch counter around you."
