Baseball quotables . . .

Andy Cohen, Indianapolis manager: "I've been pleasantly surprised by the way our club has been hitting, but outfielder Jim Delsing has been our only consistent batter. If our pitching settles down, we could be in the thick of things. Jim McDonald joined us and gave us a good game which seemed to settle the staff."

Jim Delsing, Indians' leading batsman in the American Association with a .370 average: "I'm just swinging the bat and they seem to be falling. I hope my luck holds up because at 31 I'm not too old to want another chance in the big show."

Ben Geraghty, manager of league-leading Wichita: "I haven't seen any club in the league I like better than Wichita. Our pitching has been tremendous."

Max Greenwald, Indianapolis scribe: "We had Bob Kennedy playing third base for 10 at bats. Then Brooklyn exercised its rights to claim him on waivers before the five-day option expired so he's with the Dodgers now."

Rosy Ryan, Minneapolis general manager: "There is nothing more to pitching than getting the ball over the plate. Veterans like Gene Bearden and Max Surkont know the value of control and most kids can obtain it only through experience."

Wes Covington, Wichita outfielder down from Milwaukee: "One thing I'm sure of, I proved I could hit major league pitching. Maybe somebody didn't like it when I said I was tired of sitting on the Braves' bench."

Frank Skaff, Charleston

skipper: "The difference in the baseball brain of managers can be measured on your little finger. The whole secret is handling your men and your pitching staff. If you have a happy club, the players will give you more."

Jack Tobin, Miller outfielder: "This is the first club I've been on in three years which ever had a five-game winning streak. And we play cards in the clubhouse, too."

Max Macon, St. Paul manager: "If we continue to roll this home stand, I'll believe the Saints are in the race to stay."
