● When the New York Yankees thought of employing Andy Cohen to manage Denver they asked Donie Bush of Indianapolis, formerly Andy's boss, only one question, "How is he with young players?" Donie said, "He's very good with young players," and that settled it.

● Memo to Shane McCarthy, head of Mr. Eisenhower's Council on Youth Fitness who is advising the co-operating Wheaties Sports federation: Get the sponsors to give away boxing gloves for box tops. If every American family had two pairs of boxing gloves in regular use we wouldn't have much of a delinquency problem or fitness problem.

● Congratulations to St. Paul on its decision to have its own team in the Western Hockey league next season. This is another step forward in the direction of revival of professional hockey in this area. This may induce Omaha, always a good hockey town, to move in; and Minneapolis might follow.

● Look Hurler, the old quince mess from Seattle, doubts
