Cohen, contemporary with Joe Hauser and Spencer Harris who have been honored at past dinners, was one of the most popular players to wear a Minneapolis uniform. Likewise, few have worn it longer — nearly 1,000 games.

The perky little second baseman, just recently signed as third base coach by the Philadelphia Phillies, was a Miller for seven seasons — 1932 through 1938, a winning era in Minneapolis under Donie Bush.

WITH ANDY on second the Millers finished first in 1932-34-35 and had standout teams in 1933 and 1937.

Cohen was usually leadoff man and noted more for his defensive skill than his batting prowess. Still he hit approximately .290 as a Miller, three times topping .300 with a high of .320 in 1937.

Cohen played 17 seasons starting in 1925 after lettering in baseball, football and basketball at the University of Alabama. He played with the New York Giants part of 1926 and all of the 1928 and 1929 seasons.

Andy never returned to the majors after that as a player but while up he had his moments. Biggest thrill came when, succeeding Rogers Hornsby as Giant second baseman on opening day in 1928, he drove in two runs and scored two others in a 5-2 New York victory.

COHEN HAS managed 15 years, his latest ventures in that field being at Indianapolis in 1957 and Denver in 1958. He will come from his home in El Paso, Texas, for the event and will be one guest of honor who can speak for himself. He carries a star's rating in the Knife and Fork league.

Andy will join an old opponent on the Jan. 25, program. Enos Slaughter, now Houston manager, was starring for Columbus' American Association champions in
