

Good Training

CHUCK TANNER SAYS he learned from Charlie Grimm, Gene Mauch, Dixie Walker, Fred Haney and Andy Cohen, but the manager who influenced him more than anyone else was Whitlow Wyatt, his manager with the Atlanta Crackers in the old Southern Association.

"I'll tell you why. Nothing a manager does is more important than instilling the proper attitude in his players. And Wyatt handled the players on our 1954 team better than any manager I've ever known."

In his four seasons with the Crackers, Tanner — whom most remember as an All-American, bright-eyed, fresh-faced kid — produced batting averages of .318, .345, .318 and .323. Nevertheless he was regarded as a career AA player until he surprisingly stuck with Milwaukee in the spring of '55.

Satchel Paige, a long-time resident of Kansas City, will be inducted into the Missouri Sports Hall of Fame Nov. 3 in Columbia. Satch's recognized age is 73. He last appeared in the major leagues in 1965 when he pitched three scoreless innings for Kansas City against the Boston Red Sox at age 60. Paige gave up one hit, that being a harmless single to Carl Yastrzemski.

Jim Rooker, the Pittsburgher whose pitching in the fifth game helped turn the World Series around, says the reason he shaved off the reddish beard he had grown is because nobody recognized him and, therefore, nobody wanted his autograph.

DONNIE MOORE, THE pitcher acquired by St. Louis from Chicago in exchange for Mike Tyson, throws a split-fingered fastball taught to him by former Cub teammate Bruce Sutter. Unfortunately, Moore hasn't learned to use it as effectively as has the National League's No. 1 relief pitcher. The 25-year-old Moore made 39 appearances covering 73 innings. He had a 1-4 record, only one save and a 5.18 earned-run average.

Leo Durocher, now 74, lives in Palm Springs, Calif. He maintains a low profile while socializing with his best friend, Frank Sinatra, and the Hollywood set. He reports that he runs five miles every morning, plays nine holes of golf in the afternoon every day and weighs 156 pounds. By the way, he still maintains that Willie Mays is the greatest player he ever saw because he met the five standards of greatness — speed, a great arm, good fielding, ability, and could hit for average with power.

There were quite a few eyebrows raised when Toronto named 63-year-old Bobby Mattick as its manager in 1980, but there shouldn't have been. Mattick has shown how well he can recognize talent during his long career as a scout. Take a gander at this list of players he signed and, in some cases, helped develop: Gary Carter, Rusty Staub, Curt Flood, Darrell Porter, Frank Robinson, Vida Pinson, Gorman Thomas, Steve Lécane, Warren Cromartie and Gary Roenicke.

Jim Beauchamp has been named manager of Cincinnati's American Association farm club at Indianapolis. He managed Charlestown, W. Va., of the International League last season. Beauchamp played in the bigs for St. Louis, Houston, Milwaukee, Atlanta, Cincinnati and the New York Mets. He is a former teammate of old friend Chuck Taylor and was included in several trades involving the Tennessee native.

Baltimore lefty Scott MacGregor not only should be remembered for his outstanding season and World Series performance, but also because he is the player the New York Yankees refused to turn over to Oakland's Charlie Finley in order to sign Dick Williams as manager.

KIKO GARCIA IS only the second Martinez, Calif., native to play in the majors. The other fellow born in Martinez was named DiMaggio. You've seen him on Mr. Coffee commercials. In spite of the Martinez connection with DiMaggio, Kiko says Willie Mays was his boyhood idol.

Attention, L.E.A., Fayetteville: Don Stanhouse, the Baltimore relief pitcher who is known in the dugout as "Stan The Man Unusual," has a lifetime record of 29-48. Yes, after watching him in the American League Playoff and World Series, I join you in wondering why Earl Weaver can't wait to get him into the game.

Tony LaRussa, who took over as manager of the Chicago White Sox on Aug. 2 following the resignation of Don Kessinger, has signed incumbent coaches Bobby Winkles, Loren Babe and Ron Schueler for 1980. In doing so, he dismissed the criticism that the 31-year-old Schueler is too inexperienced a pitching coach to handle a staff with three starters who each have barely a year's major league experience. "I asked some of the guys who had been pitching awhile and what they told me about Ron more than satisfied me."

When is Commissioner Bowie Kuhn going to exercise a little more of his authority and make all World Series' competition uniform by either ordering the use of a designated hitter for both teams every year or junking the whole idea altogether? The way it is now, the designated hitter is employed one year in the Series and not the next, causing the bewildered fans no end of confusion.

U.S. College Stars Win In Intercontinental Cup

HAVANA (AP) — The United States' all-star college baseball team improved its record to 5-2 Monday night with a 2-0 victory over Nicaragua in the Intercontinental Cup Tournament.

Mike Moore of Oral Roberts University pitched a three-hit shutout and struck out eight. Brian Little of Texas A&M went 3-for-5 and scored a run in the third inning.

The USA got its first run in the third inning when Kevin Shannon of Texas singled then Bill Crone of West Chester State, Pa., singled to score Shannon.

In the fifth, Little singled and Terry Francona of Arizona doubled to send Little home.

The USA team is tied for second with Japan with host Cuba leading the way with a 7-0 record. The Americans played Panama late last night. Japan tonight and Cuba Friday.
