

Jackson Wants Crack With White Sox Again

INDIANAPOLIS — (AP) — Big hit major league pitching had Ron Jackson would like another crack at the first base in only 82 ball games in his post with the Chicago White Sox. two years in the American League.

The last time he was up in the majors, he grew stale on the bench. Although far from being happy in the American Association — he likes to play before larger crowds—Jackson admits he's having the "only year I've had" in baseball.

He's hitting about .350 now. He has a dozen or so home runs, including a couple of the "tape measure" variety, and a bundle of runs batted in.

Major Prospect

Tribe Manager Andy Cohen tabs his huge first baseman as "definitely a big league prospect."

He isn't too graceful, explained Cohen, but he makes a "wonderful target." Besides, said Cohen, he gets throws "no other fellow could possibly reach."

Jackson knows what it's like to play in front of big crowds. The White Sox signed him off the Western Michigan campus in 1954 for $25,000. As a bonus player he had to stick with the parent club for two years.

Jackson thinks he could have

When the two bonus years were up last year, he was sent to Vancouver in the Pacific Coast League. He played regularly for the first time and hit .304 in 82 games, drove in 49 runs and clouted 9 homers.

The White Sox sent Jackson to Indianapolis this year when the Hoosier club became part of their farm system. Jackson immediately became the "most powerful hitter by far" for the Tribe, said Cohen.

Jackson's strike zone is a dandy. The 240-pounder stands 6 feet 7 inches. And he doesn't crouch at the plate.
