

Don Prohovich's Hitting Impresses Club's Brass

By SAMUEL POMPEI

The Chicago White Sox have sent Don Prohovich down a notch to Indianapolis of the American Association but it was no demotion for the Ware youngster.

Only one year out of college,

DON PROHOVICH

Prohovich wasn't figured to stay with the Chisox. It was a case of the Chicago brass wanting to take a good look at the former Holy Cross infielder at camp for appraisal purposes.

Matter of fact, the transfer to Indianapolis is a promotion to Don, from the Class A Western League to the Class

AAA American Association.

Free-swing Don hit .284 and blasted many a long ball for Colorado Springs last season.

On what Manager Andy Cohen of Indianapolis has seen of Don, he said: "He's our shortstop until he proves he can't make the club."

The Chisox organization believes in Don's ability to eventually reach the parent club. "He's a smart hitter. He hits the ball where it's pitched—doesn't try to pull everything like many youngsters do," says Bennie Huffman, the Chisox scout who signed Don last year.

Indianapolis President Owie Bush is also pleased on what he has seen of "Pro." "I like the way he swings that bat," the club prexy, happy over having Prohovich's services, enthused.

There doesn't seem to be much doubt about Don's ability to hit but his fielding is not yet up to major league caliber.

"He's got more to learn about playing his position. But we're not worried because he's a good student of the game and is always attempting to better himself," Cohen said of the 22-year-old, 6-1 former Ware High athlete who starred in basketball as well as baseball at Mount St. James.

The free-swinging southpaw hitter has been a shortstop during his career in college and in the minors but is capable of playing any infield position.

The Chisox admit that Don isn't big league yet but they also figure that he isn't too far away.
