The ripples from the major league cutdown of man power are passing through the Pacific Coast League now, and it may be a week or so before they hit the Pioneer League.

Until that time, the players of questionable status will be fighting it out, never sure some player will be sent down from higher classification to bump them to a lower league.

Andy Cohen, when he was managing Denver, was recalling his experiences in those desperate days of the approaching cut-down. Several writers were sitting around the dugout and Andrew was expounding thusly:

"I WAS up for a cup of coffee with the old Giants under John McGraw, and I was sweating it out, trying to stick in the big show. The more nervous I became, the more it showed in my playing. One day I had a bad time on pop flies and when I came to the bench I mentioned to Mr. McGraw that the terrible air current was doing things and making me misjudge pop flies. I mentioned whirlwinds, but Manager McGraw snapped, 'Those aren't whirlwinds, son, those are trade winds and you're leaving for Minneapolis tomorrow.'"
