"But all of our receivers (starters Aaron Williams, David Bayle and Skansi, and backups Ron Blacken and Gary Briggs), are like that."

Smooth but slick. The Huskies hope that bark has some bite against Texas' toothy defenders.

"I think (this game) will help a lot as far as next year," Flick says. "If you go out and beat a team like Texas, you can beat anybody."

SUN SPOTS: Buck Buchanan, former Kansas City Chief All-Pro defensive lineman who does testimonials for a low-calorie beer, got in a plug for his TV commercial and drew the biggest laugh at the Sun Bowl luncheon Friday at the Civic Center.

After being introduced following a skit portraying an effeminate, limp-wristed referee ("that Buck, what a hunk"), Buchanan retorted: "The Buck stops a lot of places, but it doesn't stop there."

Buchanan was called for offsides when he began his short speech: "It's really nice to be in San Antonio" . . .

Alderman Polly Harris joined the hijinks, dressed as a busty broad, when she smeared Texas Coach Fred Akers with kisses and lipstick. And CBS commentator Pat Summerall (who will be broadcasting his seventh Sun Bowl) was a victim of a skit where a woman with child (or pillow) cried out, "That's him!" and said she found out CBS stood for "Cohabitation By Summerall" . . .

Andy Cohen kidded Summerall and telecast partner Tom Brookshier in his invocation by praying that "they both make it to the broadcast booth under their own power and on time."
