

AMONG THE most popular of all in the long parade of Northern league baseball managers was Andy Cohen of the Eau Claire Braves. He was popular with the people, the players and with the press.

Besides, he was good. He had a faculty of making his players put out, without suffering any agony while doing it. He made the game a pleasure for all and it was a pleasure for all to make a contact with Andy.

Andy

He won pennants with Eau Claire in the Northern, Denver in the Western before moving on to manage the New Orleans Pelicans in the Southern these past two seasons.

President Donie Bush of the Indianapolis Indians, who just announced the hiring of Cohen for that Triple A club, said that the Chicago White Sox have been trying to get Cohen into their organization for several years.

And they will not be sorry—even though Cohen is stepping into the shoes of Kerby Ferrell, who won pennants at Indianapolis the last two years and the Little World Series this fall.

Andy's got it—and his old Polar pals are happy to hear he's on his way up. He's a nice guy who never finished last.
