

THE FANNING MILL

by Frank Farrington

THE AID to athletes budget at the University of Minnesota is going up to $100,000 this year—which is going to give a lot of small bonuses to deserving young musclemen.

Last year the Gopher performers got only $80,000 but they also were given the opportunity to earn another $60,000 for themselves in jobs around the place.

This kind of money makes it a little tough for small colleges in Minnesota, which mostly have to attract football players with the beauty of the campus, the personality of the coach or the cuteness of the waitress in the neighborhood ice cream parlor.

Of course there are always a few basketball and football men who do it good just for relaxation while getting an education.

A SKIN DIVER is not a fellow who makes a living off the South American coast plunging after discarded banana peels. He is a fellow who goes under water equipped with some oxygen, flippers and possibly a spear—depending upon what he is looking for under there.

And since skin diving is getting to be as popular at least as scrabble and monopoly are in some places, a club is under consideration here in St. Cloud. Enthusiasts are meeting tonight in Riverside park where there will be no diving. What happens when a club gets organized, Roger Moran tells me, is that equipment comes cheaper to the individual and a lot of fun is had by all—what with scavenger hunts, etc.

The club, though, is going to be selective as to its members—stressing sportsmanship and other physical qualifications. It is important to know how to swim.

ST. CLOUD'S ROX are not going to be the toughest competition of all this summer for the Fargo-Moorhead Twins, who open a series here tonight. Scheduled now at Fargo is an exhibition game between the Twins and the Denver Bears of the American Association . . . It is slated for Aug. 25 . . . Andy Cohen, former pilot of the Eau Claire Northern leaguers, is the Denver manager . . . The last time the Twins played an American Association team, in 1956, they defeated the St. Paul Saints by 13-12 . . . The wheel goes around . . . Gene Williams, the pitcher who collided with John Orsino at the plate early in July and jarred big John out of action for a couple of weeks, is himself now retired for the balance of the campaign . . . He has developed bone chips on his right elbow . . . And outfielder Art Brown of the Twisox also is out for the season . . . He has bursitis in his right shoulder . . .
