

Last Call For Sills

The reigning queen of the opera, Beverly Sills, will retire from singing after this year at the Met, so the El Paso folks who trip over to Dallas every May to see the touring Met company will have a last chance to hear her.

She will be singing in "Don Pasquale" on Thursday, May 10. Luciano Pavarotti will be heard in "Tosca" on May 11. Jon Vickers is set for a role in "The Bartered Bride" in the Saturday matinee and that night, May 12, Jess Thomas will be heard in "Tannhauser." There's a limited number of reservations, so call Josephine Fernstrom pronto if you want to get on the list.

Greener pastures

Hank Cohen bowed out of the lead in "Natalie Needs a Nightie," the current dinner theater farce holding forth at Gillespie's. He's on his way to audition for "Barefoot in the Park" at a dinner theater in Omaha, Neb. Hank, who has been in several of the CMC Productions here and in Las Cruces is serious about an acting career. He fired off resumes to a bunch of dinner theater around the country and came up with a nibble.
