

McFarlin quits head baseball job at UTEP

By JIM THOMAS

Even though U.T. El Paso baseball coach Larry McFarlin officially turned in his resignation today, he plans to continue to support the Miner baseball program.

"I didn't resign because coaching the team was financially difficult for me," McFarlin emphasized. "but it just time for me to get out. My family is just too important."

"My resignation becomes effective June 1. But I'm not going to stop recruiting. I've sent out letters and have contacted several prospects by phone. I plan to visit Wisconsin on my vacation and I will do some recruiting. I'm sure the new coach will want to get some of his own kids. But I played here and I'm going to continue to live in El Paso and support the program."

"It (coaching the team) was not easy especially coming into a program which has been down. But it something I had to try. I have no regrets about what I accomplished."

McFarlin, who replaced long time coach Andy Cohen just before the 1978-79 season,
