

As I Was Saying BOB INGRAM SPORTS EDITOR

Tall, Tall Group

ON CLOUD 7: There are 60 college basketball players in the United States who are seven feet or more in height. What I'd like to see: The Apache Belles, Kilgore Rangerettes and Dixie Darlings perform in the same bowl game. What they're doing now: Bill Munoz, former Cathedral High School football player, is manager of the Eastern Airlines Terminal at Houston. The Sun Kings have traded outfielder George Pena for pitcher Paul Jaeckel. The Kings are going to need a Hyde now. Signs of progress? Hank Iba, venerable Oklahoma State coach, is leading a fight to outlaw the stuff shot in basketball. One of his star pupils, Don Haskins, dissents. "The stuff shot is one of the most exciting shots in basketball," he says. "The crowd always gets a kick out of seeing one of its players cram the ball into the basket." Reader says UCLA stands for "You See Lew Alcindor." Bart Starr of Green Bay executed seven big third down plays against the Dallas Cowboys in the NFL title game successfully. Prediction: Paul Hornung will announce his retirement after the Super Bowl. In this week's Sports Illustrated, Bob Derleth of East Lansing, Mich., writes: "I have discovered a way to stop Lew Alcindor! Tie his feet together, grease his hands and double team him with Mel Daniels and Daddy D. Lattin." And did you hear about the mixed up gangster who carried his violin in a machine gun case?

Bigger and Bigger

NAME CALLING: Next big pro bowl might be called the Superest. Florida State didn't have any Negro players in Sun Bowl football game against Wyoming. The Seminoles did have a colored basketball player, Lennie Hall. He was injured against Florida and will not be able to play any more this season. Former Sun Kings catcher Vic Roznovsky recently underwent an operation for the removal of a ruptured spinal disc. It's a question whether he'll be able to take his place on the world champion Baltimore Orioles next season. Andy Cohen is attending his first NCAA convention. As baseball coach of the Texas Miners, he's representing UTEP at the meeting of the nation's college diamond coaches in Houston. Frank Godsoe, Amarillo sports columnist and writer who covers West Texas State athletics, is back on the job after a siege of illness. A sports writer had a call from a fan asking for the odds on the Super Bowl game. "Green Bay by eight," he answered. "Do you mean eight points or eight touchdowns?" asked the inquirer. One Memphis writer said Moe Iba, Memphis State coach, should wear basketball shoes because he's on the court so much when his team plays.

Bridges Is Coming

ALMOST THAT TIME: Rocky Bridges, new manager of the Sun Kings, will be here on Jan. 17. The Texas League and Albuquerque will miss Elten Schiller, who has been transferred to the Spokane club of the Pacific Coast League. Schiller did an outstanding job as general manager of the Duke City club. The regular college football season ended sometime ago but Troy Bledsoe, Denver University basketball coach, contends the New Mexico Lobos are keeping it alive. He said the Lobo cagers played football against him in Albuquerque this week. Lee Floyd, the Southern Mississippi basket coach, tells about getting a telephone call from a man who wanted a game with the Southerners for next season. "What's the name of your school and where are you located?" Lee asked. "We don't have a name yet and are not located," the man said. "We're operating out of a motel in Memphis now." The Southern Methodist cagers are continuing to win the close ones. They took two games in the Sun Carnival Tournament by five points and defeated Baylor in overtime 85-83 this week in Waco. The Mustangs were five points down with two minutes to go. They pulled even in regulation time and won on Charles Beasley's 20-foot one-handed jumper with two seconds left in overtime. Bobby Joe Hill has thrown away his crutches. Unhappiness is betting favorites at a race track on a day when long shots come in.

ROCKY WILL BE CURE

Kings had two bad seasons
But there are no reasons
To climb highest ridges
And burn their Bridges.
