

He'll Be With Sun Kings Again—

Player-Coach Role For Larry Stubing

Homer hitting Larry Stubing will be a player-coach for the Sun Kings next season.

John Stanfill, general manager of the Kings, announced that Stubing will not only be available as a player but will join Rocky Bridges' staff that includes Andy Cohen.

Cohen, who again will be top assistant to the manager, will coach at home games.

STUBING, according to Stanfill, will be available for both home and road games.

Stubing, following the end of the 1966 season, announced his retirement from baseball and became associated with Diamond Distributors, distributors of Hamm's and Lucky Lager Beer.

An arrangement then was worked out for Stubing to get his release from the St. Louis Cardinal chain and join the Kings. He'll still be able to direct his business interests here.

STUBING helped lead the Arkansas Travs to the Texas League pennant last season. He hit 25 homers to share the homer title of the league with Winston Llenas of El Paso. He started in the League with El Paso in 1963 and hit 27 homers. He had one of his biggest seasons in baseball in 1964, batting .316 for the Sun Kings and swatting 35 homers.

It's expected that Stubing will play a good deal at first base for the Kings in the coming season and that he'll be used for pinch-hit purposes, also.
