

By ANN CARROLL

DEAR ANN: My problems are so varied and so many, so big and so little, I am plain NUTS. I used to be able to handle my life and realize that the best I could do was all I could do, then lie down and go to sleep the night through. Now, there are so many debts since my husband died, so many problems with the home which he neglected during a long illness, delinquent insurance and past taxes, decaying teeth of the children . . . oh, oh, oh.

Ask Mrs. Carroll

HOW DO women pull out of such a morass? I have written to the creditors and told them what I could do and I have told them of my honest intentions. I have sent the children to the dentist. Still, I have that confused feeling, the despairing feeling. Can't seem to shake it. I want to sweep out my mind. But how?

H. G. F.

DEAR HGF: In an Easter bulletin from Unity, I received the following RESURRECTION FORMULA against any problem. It seems to fit your confusion: "Leave all ifs and buts on the doorstep of treatment. In other words, "Take ye away the stone." That means all your reasons for believing this prayer won't work. Remember God is not limited by conditions but by the degree of your response.

Second, withdraw your mentality from the problems by thinking on God and what he is like.

THIRD, GIVE thanks in advance to God for a complete and perfect demonstration.

Fourth: Affirm that your need is fulfilled.

Fifth: Having changed your mind from the rut it is bogged down in, do not return to the old negative outlook."

That's the best way to sweep the mind of old musty, nagging, mildewed, depressing, hopeless thoughts. You can't solve problems as long as your thoughts are blue.

I believe that thinking on what God is like to escape worries when you lie down to rest is the finest spiritual broom there is. You can imagine space, glorious light, weightlessness — anything powerful and beautiful . . . You can think anything you like and goodbye worries for the nonce.

Children Are Doing Right Smart Well

DEAR ANN CARROLL: I write this on March 17: Sure and aint I the luckiest father (my maternal grandfather was Irish through and through) on this St. Patrick's Day.

This morning I visited Ascarate School and watched my first grader, Marvell, be the lead Leprechaun in their St. Patrick's Day play. This afternoon, I journeyed to Irvin High School to watch my oldest daughter, Rose Marie, a sophomore at Ysleta High School, win the best actress award in the District One-Act Competition. Then tonight, when attending a St. Patrick's Day dance, my son, Richard, a freshman at UTEP came in from Lubbock where he was catcher for the Old Irishman Andy Cohen's Orangemen (pardon the expression) as they beat Texas Tech, 2 to 1. Yours,

ROBERT MEYERS
209 Edith Drive

DEAR ROBERT MEYER: It warms the roots of the "corazon" to hear good news. If your children feel embarrassed because their Dad mentioned in public his pride, tell them to curb the embarrassment. Some day, they will have the same feelings about their Leprechauns and actresses and ball players. We all crave to hear more about the interested, active young people. It gives us a stronger belief in the USA.

Don't Waste Time; No Chain Letters

ATTENTION, The People Who Sent Ann Carroll The Chain Letter: That letter is in the waste basket. The legend that breaking the chain brings bad luck is hogwash. I had a good chuckle over the statement that Charlton Heston received $6000 only to lose it after breaking the chain. Charlton Heston earns his dollars by hard work and dedication.

Please, do not waste your stamps sending chain letters to pore little ole Ann Carroll, unless, of course, you want her to treat them as a joke.

Husband Is Swell; Sweller Than Most

DEAR ANN CARROLL: I just finished reading the letter from TIRED WIFE. Oh, how dreary her life must be.

I am a lucky wife. My husband is wonderful to me. I get his pay except for a few dollars he keeps. I keep the budget to his liking. He gets for us everything we need. We have five children, five very happy children. My husband helps me in the home, does the outside work. I get presents for important occasions. I get my own allowance to spend as I wish.

DOES HE have faults? Yes, he does, but they are so small they aren't worth worrying

Office Furniture
Folding Tables,
Chairs, Safes

STEVENS
McMASTERS,
INC.

1019 E. Missouri
533-5937

