

Kings Host Spurs

By BOB INGRAM

Verne Geishert, the most publicized player perhaps to come to Dudley Field since Mickey Mantle played an exhibition in the El Paso park with the New York Yankees in the year he broke into the majors, is ready to "take his turn" tonight against Dallas-Fort Worth Spurs.

Geishert will hurl the first game of a twinbill, starting at 6:27. Manager Chuck Tanner of the Sun Kings announced that Jim Holbrook, ace of the Kings staff, will work the second game. Holbrook has recovered sufficiently from spike wounds received in an Austin game last week to work.

GEISHERT, PITCHER of a no-hit game at Quad Cities in the Midwestern League this year, hurler of six shutouts and holder of a 12-3 record, flew to El Paso yesterday after working the opening inning of the Midwest All-Star game Monday night.

The brawny right hander said he was ready to start and hoped to finish his first game assignment with the Sun Kings. "I've seldom had to have relief at Quad Cities this year," he said.

"I PITCHED last Friday, so today is my turn," he added. "I've been pitching every four days."

The young hurler who passed up a varsity career at the University of Wisconsin to sign with the California Angels because "I felt I had better take their offer while I had a chance," says he throws two pitches — a fast ball and a curve.

Officials of the Angels say that nobody in the majors has a faster pitch than Geishert.

THE KINGS, coming off a road trip that was disastrous to their pennant hopes, bank on a batting resurgence partly for a comeback at home.

"I think we've started hitting again," said Tanner. "And Geishert should help our pitching staff."

Some of the pitchers are still bothered by sore arms. The only regular to be physically below par is Mickey Dobbins who has a set of inflamed tonsils. However, he's expected to play in the homestay.
