

(continued on back page, col. 8)

tours up and down the two famous rivers.

(UPI Telephoto) Friday 12 to 82.

"The teachers in the schools" four county club house.

"Cries for Indians ball cap..."

Clinton Trowbridge, the youngest stockholder in the Indianapolis Indians organization is pictured at age five-months, holding his stock certificate, and wearing his baseball cap . . .

1956 was a very good year for Clinton J. Trowbridge

By DAN LOGSDON

In 1956 Oscar Robertson and Crispus Attucks dominated Indiana high school basketball. . . Mickey Maule's slugging propelled the Yankees into the World Series. . . Pat Flaherty won the Indianapolis "500" Mile Race Classic. . . AND Clinton J. Trowbridge (who?) five months old, became the youngest stockholder in the Indianapolis Indians, Inc.

The story:

Sale of stock in the Indianapolis Indians was one of the top sports stories in the year 1956. Little Clinton J. Trowbridge (pictured at right) observed the entire operation from his crib "as the youngest stockholder. . . ."

Clinton's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cliff Trowbridge, now of Greenwood route two, purchased a share of Indians stock for the toddler. Certificates were mailed to shareholders of "all ages, including 75-year-old women as well as youngsters."

Today, Clinton is 12 years old (pictured at right), and still has his one share of stock in the Indians baseball organization.

Also in his possession is a letter of eligibility for a "player tryout" with the Indianapolis Indians when he reaches the age of 18 years.

Clinton now plays baseball with the Indians, in the Center Grove Little League. . . .

Hitting three home runs in the first seven games of the season, the slugger boasts a .545 batting aver- age.

The baseball pitcher has "potential..." Its been said, and young Trowbridge is looking forward to that Indians tryout in the near future. And he'll go into the tryout with a share of stock in his hip pocket. . . .

Baseball comes up at the breakfast, lunch, and dinner table at the Trowbridge household. Clinton has two brothers, Don, age 11 and Brian, who is eight, AND they too play little league ball. Don plays for the Indians and Brian for the White Sox in the minor league.

Opening night for the Indianapolis Indians in 1957 was a memorable one for Clinton's father. Among the 3,000 stockholders who showed up to help coach Andy Cohen and his new tribesmen open the new season was — the youngest stockholder the man- agement could find, Clinton Trowbridge — Papa Trowbridge accepted a bat and hat for the boy in pre-game ceremonies.

Since the first Summer he could stand up and throw a ball young Clinton has had his heart in base- ball. . . .

Oh yes, also in 1956, Trowbridge cried for the official Indians cap to go along with his stock certifi- cate. . . .

"Player tryout is next..."

Now playing Little League baseball with the Center Grove Indians, Clinton, age 12, is waiting for his 18th birthday, and his player tryout with the Indianapolis Indians.