into home runs. But not much damage was done the first day out there, that way.

Lawrence Field has the same problem, in a lesser way. The short right field wall has turned at least three high fly outs into home runs, and all by visitors. On the other hand, up to Saturday, Wichita's only home runs were real blows, in any park.

There seems no way of putting the wall on rollers, to move in and out when the Braves are batting, or fielding, but it might be something for one of those young budding engineering geniuses to figure on, instead of trying to reach the moon in a backyard rocket.

Second Guess Always Best

Maybe Andy Cohen drew for the wrong card Friday night when he ordered Mike Roarke passed, to get at pitcher Joseph Claude Mark Raymond, under which name he's listed in the baseball records. But Andy had the figures on his side.

Raymond may be a hitting pitcher, but if so, he learned it in the Dominican Republic. The Baseball Guide reveals that Claude got but six hits all last year at Jacksonville and DID NOT KNOCK IN A RUN. So he's that much ahead of '57 in producing runs, right now.

Early season baseball is bound to be screwy. That's what makes it all the more interesting and the real fan never misses it. There are mighty exasperating moments, but something unusual might happen, and usually does. On Thursday Wichita lost a game on a misjudged foul fly. On Friday Wichita won on, the same way.
