

Tribe Brass to Confer With Cohen

Officials of the Indianapolis Indians will confer with Andy Cohen, new Tribe manager, at Jacksonville, Fla., where the annual winter minor league meeting will open Monday.

Tribe President Ownie Bush and General Manager Ray Johnston left for Jacksonville last night and will huddle with Cohen tomorrow. After his pre-convention session, Cohen plans to return to the helm of the Chesterfield club of the winter league in Panama. He will not come to Indianapolis until early in February.

One of the most important items at Jacksonville for the Indianapolis officials is to draft or purchase several players. While the Indians have a working agreement with the Chicago White Sox it is hoped to increase the number of players owned locally. The Tribe owns six and have 21 others on the present roster assigned here by the White Sox.

Funds for purchase of players are being provided through the bargain ticket campaign. Fans are being offered a book of 30 admission tickets to Indians games for $25, a savings of $8.

They may be bought over the counter at the Chamber of Commerce, and at Victory Field, or by mail.
