

Farmer's Best Crop Is Old Guns

WORTHINGTON, Ind. — Down here in the peaceful White River valley is an amazing private arsenal of machine guns, cannons, automatic weapons and plenty of ammunition.

Collecting guns is strictly a hobby with the owner, Robert Sloan, who has 150 machine guns and 250 other weapons. Some are more than 100 years old.

The 41-year-old Worthington native operates a 560-acre farm in White River valley, and he and a brother, Frederick, have a seed corn business.

The private "arsenal," which gives the house where Sloan was born a museum air, began with a percussion rifle. It's a family heirloom, a sporty cap and ball muzzle loader more than 100 years old.

His collection now includes all major American and foreign-manufactured guns. They include World War I and II models, the aircraft machine guns of Lewis, Vickers and Madison.

He even has a Gatling gun, the first successful rapid fire model. Sloan purchased that particular gun from a New York dealer 12 years ago. The price of the gun today would be about $15,000, he said.

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. — More than 50,000 turned out here last night to watch a 2-hour parade in which an Indiana girl was the center of attraction.

Riding in the Queen's float was Dotty May, who moved here last August from Evansville where she attended Bosse

High School. Miss May was crowned queen of the Fiesta Tropicales here in a contest with 21 other girls.

Also in the parade was a handsome convertible carrying Manager Andy Cohen of the Indianapolis Indians, Tribe President Ownie Bush and several officials of the Chicago White Sox. Few could miss this entry as the car was almost concealed by a large banner carrying the words "Indianapolis Indians."

As queen of the fiesta, Miss May reigned over all events. She is a senior at South Hollywood High School.
