

Millers Give Tribe Manager Big Hello

By LESTER KOELLING, News Sportswriter

MINNEAPOLIS — They love Andy Cohen here.

The people and the press are saying nice things about the Indianapolis manager, whose Indians were to help open the

Koelling

Minneapolis home season this afternoon. Andy is revered here as one of the all-time greats in Minneapolis baseball, as a player and as a personality.

But before Cohen became such a hero while playing eight years in the '30s under Tribe President Ownie Bush, then manager of the Millers, Andy was a "bum."

The story goes back to when Cohen played a spell of second base for the Giants under John McGraw. As Andy relates the incident, it goes like this:

"I was struggling, hoping to make the team, and one day I had an awful time the first few innings. I lost a couple of pop flies and almost got hit by another. Back on the bench, I said to McGraw:

"That's a terrible air current out there today, sir; those whirlwinds make the ball do funny things."

"McGraw looked at me and said, 'Those aren't whirlwinds, son, those are trade winds—and you're going to Minneapolis tomorrow'."

In recognition of his long service with the Millers, and his vast popularity in this town,

Cohen was to be honored in pregame ceremonies today, and again Monday at a Shrine luncheon.

The Indianapolis manager was described by one of the town's columnists in this manner: "Cohen was a ball player's ball player. The moves he made were not spectacular, but opponents realized he was always hurting them by being where he belonged, and doing the right thing.

"He is remembered as one of Minneapolis' all-time great ones. He helped the Millers win mainly by never helping them lose. They say baseball games are lost, not won. Well, Andy never lost one. That is the kind of player he was and the record seems to say he has been that kind of a manager."

Upwards of 15,000 were expected for this afternoon's opener, the first anniversary of the new Metropolitan Stadium. The advance sale was slightly under 13,000 and with a forecast of fair skies and mild temperatures, Minneapolis officials were hopeful of surpassing 15,000.

Ageless Satchel Paige reaps the press notices, but LUKE EASTER, another expert at

BOWLING HO

MEN

Glen Stuart.....	642	Don Reeder....
Mike Bisesi.....	631	Earl Taylor....
Al Glaze.....	620	Tom Carrico...
Gerry Siracusa.....	620	Charlie Malson.
Jack Nichols.....	617	Ernie Enlow...
		Paul Rhodarmel
		Bud Youse ...