ST. PAUL—There isn't much that a manager can do with a team when he doesn't have the stuff to do with.

Right now, Andy Cohen has the weakest "bench" in the American Association, and his Indianapolis Indians are perhaps the slowest club in the league.

He can't "run" the club and the hopeful alternative of a big inning never materializes because the hitters aren't delivering consistently. He can't juggle the lineup because he has only three outfielders and one sound catcher.

He's overstocked with pitchers, most of whom have been a tremendous disappointment. The club's mental mistakes have exceeded the mechanical errors and, except for Barry Latman, the glistening rookies of the Southland have lost their luster.

Don Prohovich, who was expected to identify himself in hitting more than fielding, has hit safely only three times in 32 trips. Dick DiTusa, the replacement for ailing Sam Mele, hasn't come close to getting a hit after his two pinch singles last Sunday.

Add 'em all up and it's understandable why the Indians have lost seven of their first 10 games, the latest a 7-5 defeat in Minneapolis.

Manager Cohen spilled his troubles to Tribe President Ownie Bush last night, but he received no encouragement for immediate reinforcements. In fact, the bad news was accentuated by the positive conclusion that Mele will be out indefinitely with an ailing back.

For the first time since the season started, Manager Cohen seems perturbed and he was so dejected last night that he declined several dinner invitations from close friends. He even has forsaken his favorite pastime of cross word puzzles and word games.

"I may not show it," he confided, "but I rankle inside. It looks like we're in serious trouble unless we can get some fast help."

Cohen may bench Prohovich in favor of Charley Williams here tonight in the series opener against the Saints in their new, $2 million roofless park. But he hesitates to do so for fear of destroying morale and confidence.

He can't seem to tear himself away from that eternal hope that this may be the game when Prohovich will find himself, and DiTusa, too. The case of these two boys is analogous to that of Roger Maris last year. Maris came fast after a horrible beginning. Maybe Prohovich and DiTusa will too.

The Indians were more or less victimized by unusual events in their loss to the Millers yesterday. After taking a 4-3 lead in the sixth on Jose Valdivielso's triple, they lost the game in the bottom half of the inning on two freak incidents.

First, Viñeć Garcia tripped over second base while in the process of negotiating a sure double play, giving the Millers new life. Then Bill DuFour, coming to the relief of Al Pappai, started his windup, stopped and stepped off the rubber.

ST. PAUL—Ed Doherty, president of the American Association, who is visiting here this weekend to talk with Braves manager Vin Cey about buying the Wichita franchise, said Doherty, "mowing my lawn."

Lynn Stone, Wichita general manager and also a visitor in the Twin Cities (Wichita plays Minneapolis tonight) said he would rather talk about Wichita's fine ball club than the poor attendance and possibility of moving from Wichita.

"I don't make those decisions on moving the franchise," said Stone. "But right now we're planning to stay in Wichita through the 1957 season. I'll admit we are concerned about poor attendance."

For the five games played at Wichita this season, the

The balk permitted one runner to score tying the game at 4-all and advancing another in position to score on a hit. Before the inning was over, the Millers scored three runs on five hits whereas they possibly could have been retired scoreless.

The Indians had everything going for them in the ninth when a belated rally netted one run, but again that big hit was missing. After two were out, Garcia singled and Jim Delsing doubled. With Ted Beard coming to bat, Roger Bowman, a southpaw, came to the mound.

Beard beat out an infield hit to score Garcia, bringing up Ron Jackson. Strangely, with a right-hander warmed up in the Minneapolis bullpen, Bowman was allowed to pitch to the right-swinging Jackson who has the potential to knock a ball over any fence in the league.
