ANDY COHEN'S PROTEST

KEN BURKHART, a Western League umpire in parts of the 1953 and '54 seasons, is now calling them in the National League.

During spring training in Florida he and Andy Cohen were talking about the Western League. Andy, now manager at Indianapolis, a White Sox farm, was the Denver boss then.

Burkhart recalled a game in which Cohen rushed out on the field after he had called a close decision against the Denver club.

"When Andy reached me he shouted, 'Are you trying to revolutionize the game of baseball?'" Burkhardt said "I was so surprised that I didn't do anything about it—let him get away with it."

Cohen was just about as good a manager as the Western League has seen since it was reactivated in 1947.

DONIE BUSH, one of the great shortstops of the old days, is the general manager of the Indianapolis club.

Both he and Cohen were at the White Sox camp this spring looking over the Pale Hose rookies. Bush had only one complaint to make about his new manager.

"Andy only sleeps when he's managing," he confided. "He stays up to see the midnight movies and is up again at 7 in the morning."
