

Beaudry Looks Good on Mound

BY GREG O'BRIEN

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. — When Manager Joe Hauser of the Duluth-Superior White Sox gets a reasonable facsimile of a baseball team assembled, he hopes to play daily exhibition games. But that day looks at least a week away.

Maybe a ball club will be Chicago White Sox Farm Director Glen C. Miller's Easter present to Hauser.

As things stand now, there still are 14 players of assorted shapes and sizes on the Duluth-Superior roster: Three catchers, four pitchers, a first and a second baseman and five outfielders. As even the simplest soul knows, that scarcely resembles a ball club.

But Hauser is the patient type. He developed that virtue waiting out the higher clubs' decision to turn loose some talent.

Meanwhile, Hauser and Manager George Noga of Dubuque have pooled their resources, such as they are, and have been sending the youngsters through a stiff (and stiffening) course on the fundamentals of baseball during this first week at this Chisox farm club training base.

Yesterday, for example, the boys worked long and hard on such items as pitchers covering first base on ground balls hit to the right side of the infield and on base-runners turning first base while legging out a possible extra-base hit.

But after batting practice, an hour of which wound up the day's work and was the first "live" such practice these boys had had, it became doubtful if the round-first drill had any real point. Scarcely any of the batters showed enough power to generate an extra-base hit.

But that was entirely understandable. These youngsters are more than ordinarily eager to make a good impression on the camp faculty and as a result, virtually all of them were swinging from the heels, with little or no semblance of timing or finesse.

With the ground soggy from an overnight rain, most of the lads weren't even getting high hoppers through the infield.

The batting practice pitchers left something to be desired in most instances, too, with the notable exception of Duluth's own John Beaudry and Panama's Joe Lizandro.

Beaudry, a lefty, and Lizandro, a righthander whom Manager Andy Cohen of Indianapolis spotted and signed in Panama, both had the ball working well around the plate.

In fact, the coaches had to slow down Lizandro, who was too far ahead of the batters. This entailed a bit of a problem, as the smiling lad from the Canal Zone understands no English. But his delivery looks good in any language.

Boros Sets Golf Pace

GREENSBORO, N. C. — If Julius Boros doesn't get too far ahead of the field in today's third round of the $15,000 Greater Greensboro Open Golf Tournament, a rousing fourth round finish may be coming up tomorrow.

The 37-year-old Connecticut native who now plays out of Southern Pines, N.C., held a four-stroke lead over eight rivals as play began today. He posted a five under par 65 in the second round for a 135 total to replace first day leader Doug Ford of Mahopac, N.Y.

The 139 second-place tie included, in addition to Ford: Marty Furgol, Lemont, Ill.; Jim Feree, Winston-Salem, N. C.; Gardner Dickinson Jr., Panama City Beach, Fla.; Howie Johnson, Houston; Al Besselink, Grossinger's, N.Y., and the youthful South African pros, Gary Player and Trevor Wilkes.

In contention at 140 were Sam Snead, Stan Leonard of Vancouver, British Columbia, and Mike Souchak, Grossinger's. The rest were seven shots or more off the pace as the field was cut to 61 pros at 105 or under and 10 amateurs at 152 or under.

Ideal weather saw 11 players crack par 70 for the 6,720-yard Sedgefield course, with Howie Johnson matching Boros' 65 for low round honors.
