

Denver Much Better, Cohen Warns; AA Top Jammed

The Millers, in first place just long enough for a night's sleep, fell flat on their faces at Metropolitan stadium Sunday afternoon. They lost a doubleheader to Indianapolis 8-4 and 6-0 and while they dropped only five percentage points out of the lead, they also are only half a game ahead of fourth place Omaha in the tightly packed American Association race.

And as Andy Cohen led his Indians out of town after gaining a split in the series, he warned that there is more trouble just ahead for the Millers with Denver moving in for a four-night stand.

"This Denver club is much better than the last time you saw it," Andy declared. "It's healthy now, better balanced and the pitching greatly improved. The Bears have plenty of power and Marv Throneberry is swinging the most devastating .220 bat I've ever seen. He kills you with one smash; he did it to us twice last week."

Denver has added several new faces since they dropped four straight here in May. Jim Pisoni has plugged the centerfield hole and pitchers like Ryne Duren, who hurled a no-hitter yesterday, Ben Flowers, Walt Kellner and Ed Donnelly have been obtained.

FLOWERS is the likely pitcher tonight when Gene Bearden starts against the Bears in the 8:15 p.m. series opener, which finds Denver only two games out of first place. Ralph Houk's club has won 18 of 25 starts in June to pick up eight games in the race. After yesterday's fiasco, Miller Manager Red Davis was shaking his head sadly. "We've got to do something about that outfield defense," he sighed. "We need a ton of runs just to stay in a ball game the way hits fall in and runners take extra bases."

Rosy Ryan is trying to "do something about it" but so far has been unsuccessful with a couple of deals falling through over the week-end. Someone will be trimmed in the next 24 hours, though, to make room on the active list for pitcher Steve Ridzik who probably will start Tuesday's game.

The double defeat could not be blamed on the outfielding, however. Joe Margoneri and Mike Blyzka were bashed in the opener and Gordon Jones (he suffered his seventh defeat) and Freddy Rodriguez "took it" in the nightcap while the Millers were collecting only nine hits all afternoon—off the low men on the Indianapolis staff.

STOCKY BILL DuFour who hadn't pitched a complete game since April 30 went the route in the opener for his third victory. In the seven-inning nightcap, Barry Latman, who had been banged for 30 hits and 20 runs in 20 innings in three recent starts, hurled a two-hit shutout.

It was his third victory in four starts against the Millers.

Offensively the big gun was Ron Jackson. The 6-7 first baseman banged his 11th and 12 home runs, a triple and three singles for six hits in eight times up and drove in six runs.

Bobby Hofman's second homer with Bill Taylor aboard and Carlos Paula's sixth with the bases empty were most of the Miller attack which was virtually nil in the nightcap.

JIM DELSING'S sixth homer was the only run off Jones in the first five innings but he was rapped for three tallies after two were out in the sixth and Rodriguez was tagged for two more in the seventh.

Brilliant defensive play by Jose Valdivielso, back at shortstop after a 10-day absence, and by Don Prohovich at third base, helped the Indians in both games.

Tonight will be Hector, Bird Island, Northwestern Bell and Barbers' night at the stadium.
