

Doherty Sees Chance for Two Million Attendance

Edward Sylvester Doherty, the silver-haired president of the American Association, never has been called a pessimist. And he is wearing his rosy-tinted spectacles as he looks forward to the 1958 campaign.

He has set as the season's goal two million admissions—something that hasn't been accomplished since 1948—and insists there is a good chance of reaching it.

"I've never seen so many positive and promising signs," he asserts after sampling the enthusiastic reports of his eight general managers.

Advance sales are up almost everywhere with several factors contributing to the rise. Here's what the general managers said:

Hillman Lyons, Charleston: "Charleston has enjoyed the most loyal support of any club in the nation despite six years in the second division. A winning team, I believe, will produce a tremendous gate and I confidently expect both. We will be much stronger."

Paul Campbell, Louisville:

"Great enthusiasm followed our working agreement with Baltimore. Under a new manager, Del Wilber, we believe we are on our way up. The fans seem overjoyed at the return of Andy Cohen, one of the most popular men in Denver baseball history."

Lynn Stone, Wichita: "Our advance sale was only 25,000 last year, but this year on March 7, it was 65,000 and a civic campaign is aiming at 100,000 with a good chance of making it." . . .

Bill Bergesch, Omaha: "The Cardinals figure to be much stronger than last year's fifth place club with 30 new faces on the roster, a 90 per cent turnover . . ."

Bob Howsam, Denver:

Donie Bush, Indianapolis: "Our ticket campaign has been most successful." He is enthused about his new manager, and part-time catcher, Walker Cooper . . .

Mel Jones, St. Paul, rates pre-season interest higher than for several winters, and Tommy Thomas, Minneapolis, observes: "The enthusiasm shown for the Red Sox organization has been amazing. Ticket sales are ahead of last year."

VERSATILE MILLERS DON'T LACK FOR UTILITY PLAYER

Special to the Minneapolis Star

DELAND, Fla.—With versatility as the keynote of the 42-man Miller squad in spring training here, Minneapolis won't lack for a utility man this season.

Jack Phillips has been working at first base, but he can play any position in the infield, and played third base in Tuesday's intra-squad game.

Harry Malmberg is a fielding genius at any infield position, as is Red Robbins, 30-year-old rookie from Oklahoma City. Robbins has the inside track for a utility post and stroked .273 at Oklahoma City last year with 97 RBIs and 27 homers.

Pumpsie Green, a switch hitter, can play second, short or third, and the same is true of rookie Yogi Hergenrader. Art Schult can be used in the outfield or at first. Don Gile has experience at first, behind the plate and in the outfield.
