

BEARS HERE, MILLER KEY

Denver 17-29 Since All-Star

A Denver team that has played only .370 ball (17-29) since playing host to the American Association All-Star game July 14 moves into Metropolitan stadium to give Minneapolis another three-game test.

The Millers disposed of the Omaha menace, for a while at least, by taking the odd game of the series Wednesday night behind Bob Smith 7-1, but can't afford to relax. A good share of their 1958 destiny is bound up with this Denver club—eight of their last 13 games, in fact.

Manager Andy Cohen blames injuries that have shelved first baseman Zeke Bella and shortstop Fritz Brickell for the past month and a half and second baseman Curt Roberts for a stretch for the Denver slide. Many games have slipped away through a patch-work infield and inconsistent pitching.

HOWEVER, the Bears still have power at the plate as they showed in clubbing St. Paul 11-2 last night.

Andy also has his 18-game winner, John Gabler, ready for the Millers in tonight's 8:15 game. A delegation from B'nai B'rith, which is expected to top 1,000, will be in the stands.

Gabler is 3-0 against Minneapolis and will be faced by Bert Thiel. The veteran hasn't hurled since Aug. 11 but has beaten Denver twice in three decisions.

The Millers go into the series a game ahead of Denver, three ahead of Omaha and 2½ ahead of fourth place Wichita, which took a 5-4 defeat in 11 innings at Louisville.

Charleston, meanwhile, remained five games away from a pennant clinch when Indianapolis ended the Senators' six-game winning streak 5-3.

Smith held Omaha to six hits last night and breezed to his fifth victory after his mates staked him to a four-run lead in the first inning.

"That's the most runs I've had to work on since I've been with the club," the southpaw grinned. "It felt good. I could relax for a change."

Smitty encountered little trouble and the only run came in the fifth when a walk to Bob Blaylock and singles by Lee Tate and Ev Joyner moved the relief pitcher around.

TWO WALKS and a hit batsman helped rout Omaha starter Don Choate who retired only one man in the first, and the Millers picked up single runs off Blaylock in the third, fourth and eighth.

Lu Clinton hit his sixth home run and drove in a pair of tallies while Eddie Sadowski also accounted for two and Paul Smith helped the 11-hit attack with three singles.

Thus the Millers topped Omaha 13-9 for the season, although winning only five of 11 at home.
